The greatest difficulty some Painters meet with, is, that one of the qualities of a good picture lies in a broad light; this they imagine to consist in a flatness, reasoning thus: If it be truth that a picture, with such lights, is best, more round ones must needs be worse. A very loose argument certainly! Since nature and daily experience of round objects teach us the contrary, especially when it is not sunshiny weather. I have said before, that the contour or out-line ought to unite in the tints of the ground, that, going off from...
