Brand New Book  Print on Demand .The mission of the Department of Justice is to enforce the law and defend the interests of the United States according to the law; to ensure public safety against threats foreign and domestic; to provide federal leadership in preventing and controlling crime; to seek just punishment for those guilty of unlawful behavior; and to ensure fair and impartial administration of justice for all Americans. From 2001 to 2009, the Department has fulfilled that mission and advanced the interests of justice and the rights of the American people. Following the attacks of September 11, 2001, the Department made combating terrorism its top priority. This shift required a significant revision to the Department's structures, policies and procedures and a substantial investment of resources. Most significant were the creation of a separate National Security Division and the FBI's efforts to transform itself from primarily a law enforcement agency into a law enforcement and domestic intelligence agency. In 2006 the Department set up the National Security Division, a new component tasked with leading the Department's efforts to combat terrorism. As part of that reorganization, the Department launched an extensive effort to prosecute threats to national security as soon as the law, evidence and circumstances permitted. In addition, between Fiscal Year 2001 and FY 2008, the FBI's budget roughly doubled, allowing for large increases in the number of intelligence analysts and language analysts, and increasing the use of special initiatives such as Joint Terrorism Task Forces. As a result of these efforts, numerous domestic and international terrorist plots were disrupted and many of the people involved were prosecuted and sent to prison, including Richard Reid (the shoe bomber),...
